School News

The 4th-8th grade Alaska studies class, which is currently studying Alaska's government, is holding a mock election for Governor and Lieutenant Governor. The class has formed to political parties, the Eagles and the Slugs, and each party has a ten issue platform. Running on behalf of the Slugs is Mathew Gain for Governor and Derrick Burt for Lieutenant Governor. They are being opposed by the eagles candidates, Courtney Collier and Lily Kroll, running for Governor and Lieutenant Governor respectively.

On Thursday the parties will be presenting their platforms to the Kindergarten through 3rd grade class, and on Tuesday they will be presenting to the high school. The election will be held on Super Tuesday during 5th hour, and the whole school will be participating. The Governor will be governing the Alaska Studies class. The Alaska studies class will also be electing state legislators and a supreme court, drafting a constitution, creating bills, and writing to their legislators.

American Idol has come to Susan B. English. Who will be the next big star? The competition won't officially start until after spring break, but students are allowed to use the karaoke machine during the lunch period, either to practice for the competition or just for fun. However, after spring break the real fun will start. The students will be given time to rehearse their songs, and then they will compete against each other for first place. There will be a panel of judges present to rate the performances and pick the winner.
