Disinfectant Residual - We routinely monitor for chlorine disinfectant residual in the distribution system. This measurement tells us whether we are effectively disinfecting the water supply, which is needed to kill micro-organisms that may be in our source water. On June 12, 2008, the disinfectant levels at the entry point to the distribution system dropped below 0.2 milligrams per liter for more than four hours, which is below the required standard. It is expected to take 48 hours to bring the residual levels back to acceptable levels.

What caused this problem and what is being done about it : The cause of low chlorine was a mechanical problem that has been corrected. The chlorine levels were adjusted and additional chlorine residual monitoring and bacteria sampling have been completed in the distribution system to verify that the water remains safe to drink.
